Baking wondersBy Veola BadeyI bought this book for one reason: I am hosting a Christmas party and I want to surprise my guests by offering them a different culinary experience. I've been baking cakes for ages, my mother taught me to do that, so I thought that finding new recipes and trying my hand on them could be kind of fun. I chose this book among many others firstly because it has to do with Christmas cakes and secondly because, as I realized, the recipes included in these pages could offer my friends and family a different kind of cake to taste. This is not the first recipe book that I bought and it won't be the last, but it is one of the best that I ever set my eyes upon. It's not only the recipes and the various tips that make this such an important volume for the baker in me, but also the fact that the author offers an abundance of info which really helped me decide what exactly it was that I wanted to bake for Christmas. I've worked on more than one recipe and the results were amazing. Even my mother, who's really great at baking, was left speechless with my efforts and rushed to buy the book herself, so that she could get ready for parties to come. This guide made us both rejoice and it also showed us that no matter how much we know about baking there's a whole world out there that still waits to be discovered. And that was simply wonderful.

Wherever you are in the world, if people celebrate Christmas there, they are bound to be making cakes. Everybody loves a good cake, and some, like me, like it more than most, because more than anything they love the whole preparing and baking process, but also the rewards that follow when other people get to enjoy what they make. I've been baking cakes ever since I was a young girl, and I thought that by now I've tried my hand in just about everything, but as it turns out I was wrong. Perhaps I knew a lot when it came to our local baking scene, but I knew next to nothing when it came to cakes baked at this festive period all around the world. My younger daughter bought me this ebook and told me that I'd love it, while she'd simply enjoy the results. It didn't take me long to understand what she meant; I'd do the baking, and she'd do the eating. Well, I was more than happy to oblige since, as I've already said, I really love baking. As someone who knows her way around the kitchen I didn't find it hard to follow the instructions in this guide. Little by little I started going through most of the recipes and found myself having a lot of fun along the way. And of course my family was more than happy to consume what I produced. This guide has made our Christmas a bit tastier.

If one could take a look at my actual book shelves as well as the virtual ones they'd see dozens if not hundreds of recipe books. I can't recall exactly what was it that turned me into a baking lover; perhaps it was my grandma, who worked miracles in the oven, or maybe it was my love of good food, no matter what form it took. Whatever the reason I've never stopped baking and I've never stopped searching for new or old recipes that eluded me so far. This is a big world we live in, the baking one I mean, so even though we'd like to we'll never be able to know everything about it. But that doesn't mean we should stop trying. I bought this excellent guide because it promised to expand my baking horizons, and that it did. Within its pages I have found recipes from many countries; recipes for cakes, bread and muffins, for pies and cupcakes and brownies. With each new recipe came a new surprise, and with each new surprise some more joy found its way into my household. My husband and children were more than happy to try everything that came out of my oven, and kept asking for more. And more I gave. Thanks to this book this year the Christmas table will be very different from the past, and for that I guess we'll all be very pleased and grateful.

Want to make great memories with your kids this Christmas? Looking for ways to engage them in the holiday activities? About the Author Pamela Landsbury is an accomplished author, interior designer, and wedding planner with years of experience under her belt. Her days are usually filled with jotting down notes for her next book, meeting a wide range of clients, planning spaces for different types of properties, making sure dream weddings come true, and surfing the Internet for the latest in design trends. Despite her busy schedule, Pamela still finds time to be Super Mom. She cooks, bakes, plans meals, washes, sews, paints, knits, and brags loudly about her children's accomplishments. When not getting swamped with work and not managing her home, she develops a myriad of recipes for delicious pastries, cookies, meats, desserts, and center-of-the-table dishes. A native of Baltimore, Maryland, she earned a degree in interior design from the University of Her Choosing. Pamela has also appeared in regional and national magazines. She has lived in Pennsylvania, Texas, and finally California when she married her soul mate. They now have two wonderful kids and a rescued dog together. An avid traveler, Pamela has gone to different places around the world, and is still in search of more places to discover and have foodie adventures. One of her dislikes is writing about herself in the third person.
